INVESTMENT MANAGERS' COMMENTARY

The performance of the CLO Arbitrage fund was +0,04%.

Short-term uncertainty did not appear to disrupt the markets over the month. The Federal Reserve cut its policy rate by 25 bps. However, Jerome Powell struck a cautious tone, emphasizing that the transitory effects linked to tariffs were still difficult to interpret and that the recent shutdown was also clouding the outlook. Inflation nevertheless remained stable at 3% year-on-year, indicating a limited impact from the new taxes and a moderation in housing and consumer goods costs. The slowdown in the labour market seems to reflect supply-side constraints rather than genuine signs of weakening demand. In the euro area, the ECB kept its policy rates unchanged at 2.15%, noting continued positive growth in the third quarter and inflation now close to 2%, in an environment of still moderate economic activity. October proved to be particularly dynamic for the primary market of leveraged synthetic loans. A total volume of +€ 15,2 Bn was placed, split between 14 new transactions and 22 refinancing operations, making it the second most active month of the year. In this context, the compartment participated in the issuance of the MDPKE 21X CLO, managed by UBS Asset Management, offering a spread of 130 bps over 3-month Euribor. This new strategy replaces the full early redemption of the PSTET 2022-1X note, which occurred mid-month. On the secondary market, spreads widened overall, mirroring the trend observed in the European ABS market, due to two consecutive months of high issuance volumes. Senior tranches saw a widening of around 6 bps over the period, though the carry generated by positions in the portfolio helped offset the impact. It is worth noting that A and BBB tranches experienced more pronounced movements, with respective widenings of 10 and 22 bps (source: JPM).
