INVESTMENT MANAGERS' COMMENTARY

Stork DMS fund benefited from the gradual normalization of markets in April, following the geopolitical shock at the end of February. From the beginning of the month, risk assets rebounded, supported by hopes of de-escalation in the Middle East and the announcement of a ceasefire, in a context of easing tensions. This movement led to a rapid return of risk appetite, resulting in tighter credit spreads and improved sentiment across financial markets. On the macroeconomic front, data confirmed resilient global growth, while inflationary pressures remained persistent. In this environment, central banks maintained a cautious stance, limiting expectations of a rapid easing of monetary policies and thereby contributing to the stabilization of overall financial conditions.

All compartments contributed positively to monthly performance, although with differentiated dynamics across strategies. In this context, the Fixed Income compartment benefited from easing monetary policy expectations and the decline in short- and intermediate-term interest rates, allowing profits to be taken on positions benefiting from lower rates in the euro area and the United Kingdom. The areas most sensitive to the previous shock, notably France and Italy on 3-year asset swap maturities, outperformed in an environment of sovereign risk premium compression. The Credit compartment benefited from tighter spreads, particularly through strategies on iTraxx Main S44 and Crossover S44 index tranches. Basis trades initiated on Veolia 01/31 and Deutsche Telekom 06/30 bonds against CDS also contributed positively to performance. Securitized funds also evolved in a more favorable environment, supported by renewed risk appetite and positive inflows into the asset class. The ABS compartment therefore benefited from spread tightening in the secondary market, while higher-rated European CLOs continued to compress.

On the equity-related side, the Convertible compartment was a significant performance driver, benefiting from a more supportive market environment characterized by generalized spread tightening and improved macro sentiment. The entire portfolio performed favorably, with contributions from both corporate and financial issuers. The GlobalWafers 1.5% 01/2029 convertible bond was a notable contributor, supported by the revaluation of the underlying equity in the semiconductor sector. The Nexi 0% 04/2028 position also advanced, driven by expectations of consolidation within the payments sector. Finally, the M&A compartment also delivered a positive contribution, benefiting from a more favorable environment for merger and acquisition activity. Performance was mainly driven by positions reinforced during previous phases of volatility, with Iveco Group being the main contributor. The positive momentum in this position was supported by the completion of the transaction involving the Defense division and the distribution of a special dividend, further enhancing the compartment's performance.

More broadly, the positions reinforced during the volatility phases of March contributed to the performance rebound observed across all strategies in April.
